INNOCENT VICTIMS OF BURGLARIES 'VIOLATED'

VICTIMS of burglaries feel violated when their home has been ransacked, according to a psychologist.

By PAM LESMOND

"They feel as though their home is no longer their castle — it's extremely upsetting, especially if things have been overturned or messed up," Dr Lyn Barrow said.

Dr Barrow said if the victim suffers another burglary they can become extremely nervous and frightened.

Dr Barrow said burglary victims suffer from enormous stress after repeated attacks. "People living alone, especially elderly women, are prone to severe stress."

He said some people become too scared to leave their homes because they fear it will be ransacked.

"I think we should be looking at the reasons why people need to steal rather than imposing harsh sentences," Dr Barrow said.

Another psychologist, Dr Robert Spillane, said people rarely believe they will fall victim to a burglary attack.
